Roosevelt's Grand Opportunity.

Again in his spectacular career Theodore Roosevelt has a grand opportunity. It is the opportunity to make a self and unselfish addition to serve a third term as President. It is the opportunity to reunite the republican and progressive parties, as the direct result of the personal quarrel between him and Taft. He shares with Taft the responsibility for this division and for the common disaster which resulted. Both men are under heavy obligations to make amends to the extent, if necessary, of complete self-sacrifice. The rallying in the last presidential election, and in the primaries that preceded it, showed that the progressives controlled most of the republican states and that the republican party, thus controlled, was in effect the dominant political party.

These progressives, now divided and rendered impotent, are entitled to unite and with a conservative-progressive presidential candidate and a distinctly progressive platform to make a vigorous effort to gain control of the national government and to crystallize their political principles into legislative actualities. Theodore Roosevelt is under obligations to see that these reunited republican progressives are not handicapped by a presidential candidate who checks the national anti-third term sentiment, and who in becoming a candidate repudiates his personal pledges. Omitting recall of judges and judicial decisions, Roosevelt's platform is in substance the platform of the progressives of all parties. They are entitled to it, and they should have it. Roosevelt should see that in their reunion and in the subsequent political battle they have the full benefit of it, and of his own sincere and most effective personal support.

The existing political condition is not wholesome for the republic, since the split in one great political party permits the other, though in the minority, to act as it pleases in respect to issues of vital national concern without much danger of being called to account when it goes wrong. The issues in a presidential election should be clear, and the victor should have behind him a majority of the voters who voted in order to make clear the meaning of the country's verdict.

Roosevelt, if he becomes Warwick, the kingmaker, and again his assurances that he does not aspire to be king, will thus do the republic a distinct service as well as the millions of his political associates in the republican and progressive parties.

Fair Treatment for the Horses.

A horseman and a horse lover in New York has asked attention there to the matter of horsebuses, saying "now that the hot days of summer are drawing near, won't you kindly lend your assistance in an effort to discourage as far as possible the almost universal use of the horsebus as a means of feeding the work horses of this city? Most of these smothering abominations sit closely around the horse's head, admitting a very inadequate supply of air." The work horse has more troubles than most men think of. His lunch time is one brief respite in his day of toil. The horsebus is a useful institution in a way, but it is not the most comfortable thing for a horse on a hot day. It is not too tight, his muzzle may be jammed too far into the oats and other things may happen. All approved horsebuses have a little ventilator in them. That helps some, especially if it is turned to the front. In the streets of Washington may often be seen horsebuses reversed out on hind part before, with the ventilator exactly where it should not be. It is also not an unusual thing to see a poor horse standing patiently and abjectly with a horsebus after having finished his midday oats or shelled corn. This is also a season when horse owners should know whether their animals are overdriven and overloaded and whether they get enough water. Watering troughs are everywhere about the city and there ought not to be a thirsty horse in the streets of Washington.

Charges that defective material was used in constructing the Panama canal might suggest an interesting and instructive exhibit at San Francisco by the steel manufacturers.

The sum of $300,000 is to be spent by the government for aeroplanes. The sum is obviously not sufficient to include life insurance premiums.

Facilities for a friendly game of tennis in the White House grounds are lacking, but a little equestrian diversion might be arranged.

While Huerta's resignation may not be secured, something equally as good with doubtless be provided for.

Pennsylvania.

In an interview, A. Mitchell Palmer, democratic candidate for senator, is quoted as saying: "The issue in Pennsylvania is Penroseism."

Not the issue for Mr. Palmer to rest his campaign on. Mr. Pinchot can afford to make much of it. His candidacy for the Senate is distinctly anti-Penrose. It is local. On national questions he and Mr. Penrose are in accord. If re-elected, Mr. Penrose will vote for protection whenever the tariff comes up in the Senate. If elected, Mr. Pinchot will do the same thing. Mr. Penrose is a Roosevelt man on canal tolls, on the Mexican question, and on the Colombia treaty question—as much so as Mr. Pinchot.

But between Mr. Palmer and Mr. Penrose there is no agreement on anything of a political nature. They are irreconcilably at odds. One is a democrat, the other a republican. Mr. Palmer stands for the administration, and hopes to see another democratic Congress, and Mr. Wilson re-elected. Mr. Penrose is opposed to the administration, and hopes to see it rebuked this year and again in 1916.

If Mr. Palmer confines himself on the stump to what in Pennsylvania and as applied to Pennsylvania affairs is called Penroseism, he will rob himself of texts which, as an administration democrat, nominated for senator by administration influence, he should use. The administration claims that in a brief period, through the power of the new leadership, it has put important laws on the books, and made possible other legislation for which the country is clamoring. It is proud of the record, and asks endorsement on it in November, discussed.

As a member of the House Mr. Palmer has helped make the record, and it elected to the Senate he will be as faithful a follower of Mr. Wilson there. All of this must come out of the Pennsylvania campaign progress. There are local features which will receive attention. A governor is to be elected, and Pennsylvania affairs will dominate the gubernatorial contest. But in the senatorial contest national affairs will, and should, have the call; and the voters will want to hear the tariff, the trusts and our foreign policy.

New York and Canal Tolls.

Objection is made in bull moose circles to the suggestion of the name of Oscar Straus in connection with the canal toll race in New York. He is on the wrong side of the canal tolls question. He has taken stand in favor of repeal, and by so doing repudiated the Chicago platform as Mr. Wilson has the Baltimore platform. Thus is added a new feature to the remarkable York mix-up.

Mr. Root is the head and front of the repeal movement. He revived it after Great Britain practically had abandoned it. But for his attitude, the present contest would not have come into existence. Pressure would not have been brought to bear to force Mr. Wilson to change his attitude. And yet the New York republicans have not as a body declared for repeal. Some prominent men among them are strongly opposed to it.

The leader of the anti-repeal forces in the Senate is Mr. O'Gorman, who has said, not only that the repeal proposition is un-American, but that if it is passed under White House pressure the people will rebuke the action at the polls. He speaks as a democrat, and moreover as a member of the committee which framed the Baltimore platform.

And yet Mr. Wilson's friends are expecting the rank and file of the New York democracy to line up behind the President in the matter next November. In the contest between him and Mr. O'Gorman they are backing Mr. Wilson to win.

Two years ago Mr. Straus was the bull moose candidate for governor of New York, standing without criticism as it is of his plans, on the Chicago bull moose platform. When and why he changed his mind on canal tolls, rejecting the bull moose declaration and accepting that of Mr. Root and Mr. Wilson, is not known. At any rate, now that the fact is known, prominent bull moose New Yorkers condemn Mr. Straus, and express the opinion that his shift of foot on canal tolls takes him out of the bull moose equation for senator.

The extent to which the tolls question will enter into the New York campaign is conjectural. Mr. O'Gorman has declared that in the campaign of two years ago it was an inspiring "American note." Is it not more inspiring now? Then it represented something nearly everybody thought we had a perfect right to do. Now it represents that, plus a strong resentment against the outside influences that have combined to shape American politics, day after day, and make us a nation of large domestic concern and confound a violation of national faith-keeping.

Much has been asserted and proved against the repeal proposition in the Senate debate which will make "mighty interesting reading" next fall, not to mention the arguments of Speaker Clark and the two House leaders, Mr. Underwood and Mr. Mann, who examined the question from every angle, diplomatic, economic, legal and patriotic. If the Senate concurs in the House action of repeal, the campaign, in New York and elsewhere, will hum with the subject.

Britain at San Francisco.

The decision of the British government not to participate in the Pan-American exposition in San Francisco, but will cause no halt in the preparations for that great exposition, and will have little effect on its magnitude. It is believed that the principal regret for British non-participation in the exposition is the fact that it will be felt by British subjects, and especially by those who visit the fair. Early in May it was announced over the cable that the decision which the English government reached a year or so ago not to participate in the world's fair at San Francisco would be reconsidered, and the hope was expressed that the adverse decision would be reversed. The Star in commenting on this probable change said that "the previous decision of the British government not to take part in the Panama exposition was based on nothing more than weariness with world's fairs and the cost of participation in them. The decision was greeted at the time throughout the British Empire with hostile criticism, the critics admitting that the world's fair business had become somewhat of a bore, but that in the case of the Panama exposition the British government had drawn the line at the wrong fair, and it was considered only a question of time when the government would reverse its position." Public opinion in the British Isles and over-sea dominions may yet induce the British cabinet to alter its view of the situation. Participation by the British government in the opening of the Panama canal is assured, the "Mother Country" sending a squadron or a fleet of warships, "showing," as the previous Argosy has put it, "the importance attached to the occasion and to the good will of the United States."

A number of people are interested in Roosevelt's comment on South America because of a hope that he will drop some incidental remarks on affairs in North America.

Lack of time prevented Wilson and Roosevelt from exchanging any views as to how many presidential terms a man may properly seek.

necessary. Under the terms of the parliament act, to which the house of lords was compelled to assent by the threat of the creation of enough liberal peers to outvote a bill which shall have been passed "by the house of commons in three successive sessions (whether of the same parliament or not) and, having been sent up to the house of lords at least one month before the end of the session, is rejected or unacceptably amended by the house of lords in each of these sessions, may receive the royal assent." In the matter of the home rule bill there can be no doubt as to the royal sanction. The Ulster complication promises a future conflict over the terms of the promised amendments of the home rule law in the interest of the Protestant counties. Ulster, but the main issue goes into operation irrespective of the result of this fight to amend it.

The historic struggle is drawing to a close and the world in general and the United States in particular wishes happiness and prosperity to Ireland. The home rule cause has always had in the United States a staunch and practical friend, and the course of nationalism in Ireland has been followed by The Star with keen and sympathetic interest. When Prime Minister Gladstone introduced his first home rule bill, in 1886, America applauded, and when that bill was killed in the house of commons at its second reading America grieved. In the years of agitation and discussion which intervened between the defeat of Gladstone's first bill, June 12, 1886, and the introduction of his second, rule bill, February 13, 1893, the people of the United States followed the matter with close attention. That bill passed the third reading in the house of commons September 1, 1893, but a week later was rejected by the vote of 419 to 41. More years of discussion followed, and it was on April 11, 1912, that the third home rule bill was introduced by Premier Asquith. Between 1912 and 1913 the parliament act which took from the lords the power to block this measure of reform was passed, and on January 16, 1913, the third home rule bill passed the house of commons for the first time under the parliament act. Two weeks later the house of lords rejected the bill by a heavy majority.

The house of commons passed the bill a second time July 7, 1913, and the house of lords a week later again rejected it. Yesterday the house of commons passed the bill for the third and last time, and the house of lords may express itself again, but no matter what form this expression takes the bill will be ready for royal action and in this case the royal assent. The good wishes of the world are with the Irish people. Ireland is much more prosperous than in the early days of home rule agitation, and it is hoped and believed destined for great and increasing prosperity and content under home rule.

Congratulations are due to Mr. Taft as a man who is able to remain in the public eye without sacrificing his summer vacation.

None of the new "fashions" succeeds in being quite as startling as the descriptions and illustrations. Intimations that Becker will tell all he knows may cause him to receive written requests not to "squel."

Possibly diplomacy will adopt the term "near-war" to describe transactions in Mexico.

Every explorer whose accuracy is questioned must expect expressions of sympathy from Dr. Cook.

Past experiences prevent a chance of Sir Thomas Lipton's losing the next race through overconfidence.

SHOOTING STARS.

BY PHILANDER JOHNSON.

Hopeless. "Is there any public man who really meets with your full approval?" asked the weary listener.

"No," replied Mr. Growcher; "years ago I gave up trying to decide which man I liked most. I went ahead and voted for the one who displeased me least."

Delayed in Transmission. The fruit crop is a great success. Throughout this broad and blossoming land, though some of us, we must confess, won't see the fruit until it's canned.

His Line of Thought. "I suppose you are thinking up new things to tell the people out home."

"No," replied Senator Sorghum. "I'm trying to find some way to take back what I told them when I was there before."

The Program. "You didn't attend to any of those matters I mentioned when you left the house," said Mr. Crossroads.

"I'll do better next time. 'Forgive and forget,' you know."

"Yes. You'll do the forgetting and I'll do the forgiving."

Heartless. "Bliggins is a dreadful man to argue with."

"Does he lose his temper?"

"No. He's so heartless that he laughs when the other fellow loses his temper."

Old Song Modernized. "Drink to me only with thine eyes," A poet sang one day.

As, with a sense of soft surprise, He gazed in eyes of gray.

"Oh, with thine eyes pray drink to me And mine will drink to you."

He warbled in a tender key, Entranced by eyes of blue.

And then he sang to eyes of brown And eyes as black as night— The judge and jury saw a frosty gleam In the old fellow's twinkling eye.

For breach of promise made his fate A thing of knots and links The way he went was far from straight, Because he mixed his drinks.

Roosevelt in Washington.

From the Springfield Republican. There need be no question that tomorrow evening in Washington, before the National Geographic Society, Mr. Roosevelt will put "the river of doubt" on the map so it will never come off.

That River.

From Chicago News. While no one doubts the inequality of the protean colonel, it is more likely that he discovered that river than invented it.

Becoming Tame.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Years of maturity have softened Col. Roosevelt's nature. It is now apparent that he would rather be known to posterity as a mope than as a bronco buster.

Studebaker
ECONOMICAL
SIX
$1575

It holds the road; it travels in a straight line.

Set its course on the crown of a country highway, and the Studebaker SIX stays there.

It does not creep or slide to one side or the other, as many cars invariably do.

This quality we call roadability.

It indicates perfect balance, and balance goes back to Studebaker engineering and manufacturing methods.

Specifying our own steel, giving them our own heat treatments; forging and machining a and stamping all parts in our own plants; we build lighter and distribute that light weight with perfect uniformity.

So we have great advantages over the assembler.

He must accept the parts-maker's standards of quality and weight.

We get our own because we manufacture from raw materials made to Studebaker formulae.

The result is better quality, true roadability—vastly better value than any other "Six."

Send for the Studebaker Proof Book, describing Studebaker manufacturing methods.
